Symonds, ed. In the mid-eighteenth century a group of Scottish composers began to respond to Allan Ramsey's call to "own and refine" their own musical tradition, creating what James Johnson has characterised as the "Scots drawing room style", taking primarily Lowland Scottish tunes and adding simple figured basslines and other features from Italian music that made them acceptable to a middle class audience. Moreover, such turbulence decreased the utility of the top-down planning process as an instrument for identifying competitive applications of information technology.
